

across the country and probably, it's important for protected individuals to consider preventive measures. Immunization provides the best protection. Additionally, anyone who is exposed should monitor symptoms," the Orange County Health Care Agency said in a statement to The Times.

Symptoms include fever, cough and red, watery eyes. People can be contagious from about four days before the rash begins through four days after.

Those suspecting they have measles should call a medical provider before they go to the doctor's office to avoid potentially exposing other patients, the Health Care Agency said.

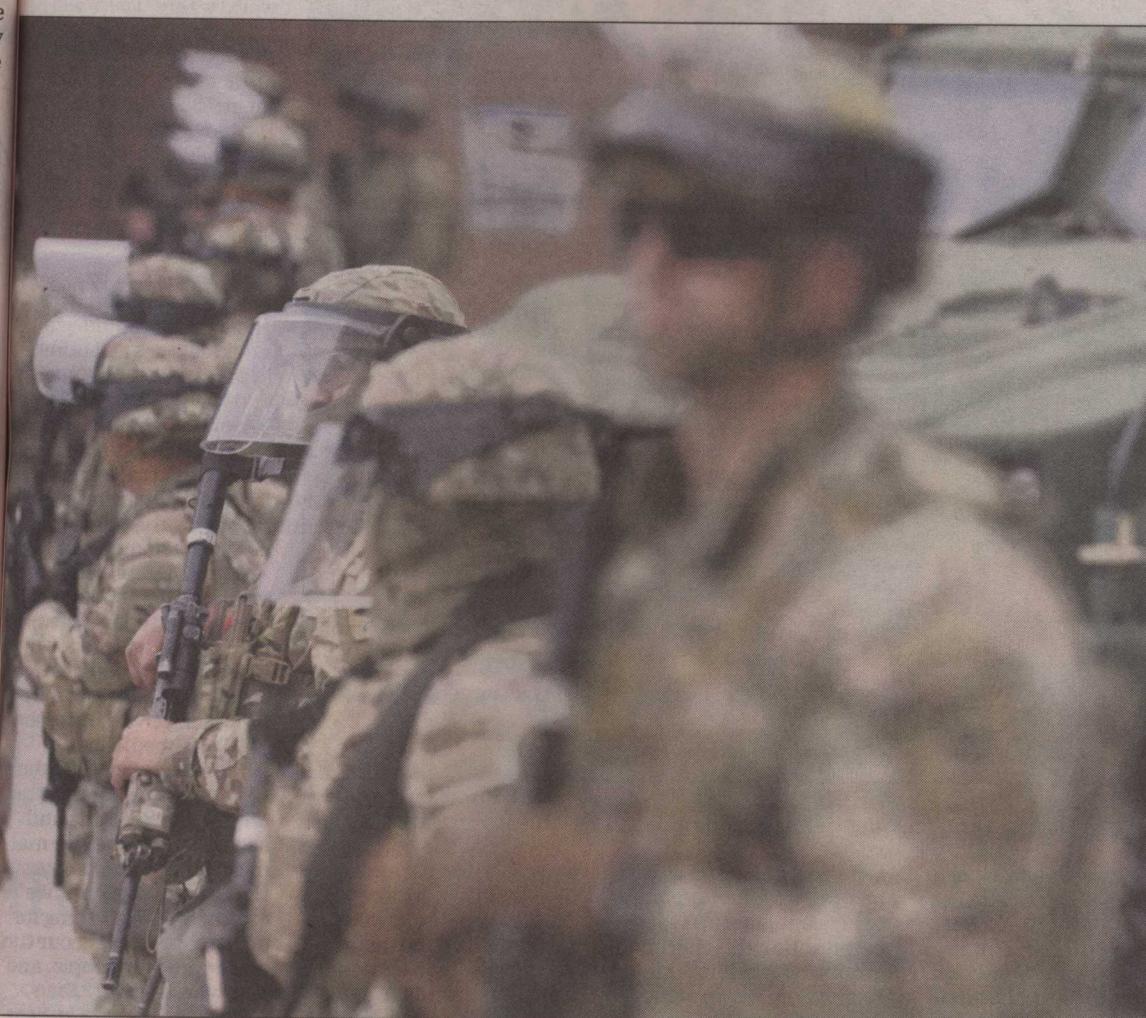

The rash traditionally appears at the hairline and works its way down the body, according to Pan. He has seen one case of measles this past month, which was in the Santa Monica area, Hudson said.

Officials said people possibly exposed to the measles individual at a Trader Joe's and a Kroger on the afternoon of

The MMR vaccine protects against measles, mumps, and rubella, providing excellent safety. Hundreds of millions of children have safely received the vaccine worldwide, he said in a statement to The Times.

CALIFORNIA

FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 2025 :: LATIMES.COM/CALIFORNIA

JASON ARMOND Los Angeles Times

THE CUTS to California National Guard's firefighting capacity come just as peak fire season is starting.

CalGuard fire crews operating at just 40%

Most members are in L.A. as part of Trump deployment

BY HAYLEY SMITH

As California braces for a potentially dangerous fire season, Gov. Gavin Newsom says critical firefighting crews from the state's National Guard are operating at just 40% of capacity following President Trump's order to divert them to Los Angeles in response to federal immigration action.

Eight of the California National Guard's 14 firefighting crews — known as Task Force Rattlesnake — have been deployed to L.A. as part of Trump's federalization of the Guard, Newsom said this week. Task Force Rattlesnake is made up of more than 300 members of the California National Guard who work at the direction of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

Only six crews are left to prepare for and potentially respond to fires, down from nine just a week ago, according to the governor.

"With peak fire season well underway across California, we need all available resources to protect communities," Newsom said in a statement. "President Trump: rescind your illegal order and get the Guard back to the critical firefighting and prevention work that actually keeps communities safe."

CalGuard officials said the troops were called to federal active duty under Title 10 authority, which empowers the president to activate National Guard troops for federal service under certain emergency protocols. Newsom has opposed these actions as an unwarranted and illegal infringement on the state's authority.

Trump invoked Title 10 on June 7 when he announced he was deploying National Guard troops to Los Angeles to "temporarily protect [U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement] and other United States Government personnel who are performing Federal functions."

California Military Department

[See Firefighting, B4]

Voices GUSTAVO ARELLANO COLUMNIST

What Cudahy's vice mayor meant when she hit up 'cholos' to fight immigration sweeps

In the wacky political world of southeast Los Angeles County — where scandals seem to bloom every year with the regularity of jacarandas — there's never been a mess as penado as the one stirred up this week by Cudahy Vice Mayor Cynthia Gonzalez.

How else would you describe an elected official telling gang leaders, in a video posted to social media, to "get your members in order" and take to the streets against Donald Trump's immigration raids?

Gonzalez's rant has set off a national storm at the worst possible time. Conservative media is depicting which it called "despicable," and insisted that "this kind of garbage" has fueled "assaults" against its agents.

Gonzalez later asked her Facebook friends to help her find a lawyer, because "the FBI just came to my house." To my colleague Ruben Vives, the agency didn't confirm or deny Gonzalez's assertion.

The first-term council member deserves all the reprimands being heaped on her — most of all because the video that set off this pathetic episode is so cringe.

"I want to know where all the cholos are at in Los Angeles — 18th Street, Florence, where's the lead-ceived no advance communication, no opportunity to advise our client, and no information."

Advocates, defense attorneys and even some prosecutors have long sounded the alarm about the problems that could arise from ICE using state criminal courts as staging grounds for federal immigration enforcement. When ICE engaged in similar behavior across California, Oregon, New Mexico and Colorado in 2017, during President Trump's first term in office, prosecutors in some states reported having to drop cases because undocumented immigrants would no longer serve as witnesses.

[See Courthouse, B5]

ICE arrests at courthouse stir fears of effect on legal system

Defendants in local case are seized. Tactic could silence victims, witnesses, critics say.

BY JAMES QUEALLY

Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents arrested two women Tuesday outside a Los Angeles courthouse after a hearing in a local criminal case, marking the first instance in recent weeks of the Trump administration using a tactic that has drawn condemnation from the legal community.

Adriana Bernal, 37, was detained after appearing in the Airport Courthouse on La Cienega Boulevard late Tuesday morning, said Jennifer Cheng, public information officer for the L.A. County alternate public defender's office.

Video from the scene shows law enforcement agents, most in all-black clothing, leading a woman toward a black truck with tinted windows outside the courthouse as one onlooker screams, "Oh my God, oh my God," repeatedly. The agents had been waiting in the third-floor courtroom where Bernal and two other defendants were scheduled to appear, Cheng said.

"Our client walked out of the courtroom and was followed by these individuals. Once our client was outside the building, these individuals (who were not in any uniform), handcuffed her, put her into a dark colored SUV and drove away," Cheng said in an email to The Times. "We were absolutely blindsided by what happened. These purported ICE agents detained our client without notice or explanation. We re-

LAPD says that it didn't help ICE with raid

BY SUMMER LIN

Immigrant rights activists are denouncing the Los Angeles Police Department after officers were videotaped separating an angry crowd from a group of masked federal agents as they loaded a woman into the back of an SUV.

"The people were coming out to defend them and guess who protected the kidnappers who are kidnapping our people? LAPD officers," said Unión del Barrio member Ron Gochez at a demonstration outside LAPD headquarters Tuesday.

The video, which was shared with ABC7, has inflamed tensions between L.A.'s Latino community and the LAPD and comes amid increasingly aggressive federal immigration sweeps across Southern California.

The department has issued a statement insisting that it was not cooperating with federal authorities. Instead, the officers were responding to reports of a kidnapping in downtown Tuesday, when they stumbled upon federal immigration agents conducting a raid before an "agitated" crowd.

The officers took a position between spectators and immigration agents in an attempt to "de-escalate tensions," the release said.

But immigrant rights groups, including Unión del

